

Closing Out The Summer Strong

July and August are always the hottest parts of the summer - and this year has been no exception.

Your house has made it through some rough heat in 2021, but is there anything you need to worry about in this final stretch of summer heat?

Changes are you've been stressing your electrical system with increased and prolonged use this summer. From tripping circuit breakers to wasted energy from comfort systems or fans being used when there is no one in the room, only an electrical safety inspection by a expert like us can help you to know with certainty that your property is safe

Beat The Heat Through The End of Summer

While we usually look forward to the warmth of summer, right about now is when we are anxious for a bit of a cool weather break. Let's talk about a few tips and tricks to help you beat the heat through the end of summer and how an electrician can help!

- Power Down Electronics Whenever Possible - Computers and TVs (and other less efficient electronics) can throw off a lot of heat when left on and unattended. Unplugging those electronics can help you slightly drop the temperature in your home.
- Know Your Body's Cooling Points - A cool, damp washcloth place at common places on your body where your pulse can be taken (like your wrist and neck) can help to quickly cool you down.
- Power Surge Protection & Electrical Safety - Sharp increases in energy consumption paired with rapidly changing weather is a bad combination. Having whole home surge protection and an electrical safety inspection completed is the best way to truly know your home is equipped to survive the summer.
